Ho'oulu Pāhiahia students from Ke Kula 'O Nāwahio Kalani 'ōpu'u explore the choices they face as young people in today's complex world. Via original scripts written and performed by the students, a glimpse into decisions to bully, lie, steal, and disrespect elders is looked at from different angles, dealt with, and resolved, leading to deep learning for all involved. Each scene opens with a group slam poem—a poignant spoken-word piece—which is designed to serve as a prelude, introducing the audience to the overarching theme of the performance.

The main character in this scenario is woken up in the early morning by mean and bullying texts. She allows those cruel words to affect her entire demeanor and her actions throughout the day. Words carry great power at the tender age of 12 and can either make or break a person. As we join these characters through their journey of life lessons, let us make innerconnections to our own actions and let them reflect on how we would like to be treated in life while remembering the power of our words.
